

10. One ant can always tell, by some means which we do not yet quite understand, whether another one belongs to its own nest or not. If it does not there is generally a fight between them, unless one of the two runs away.

11. It is only too easy for a less wise girl, looking for a chance of 'enjoying life to the full' , to get to know the people who will take advantage of her and possibly lead her into trouble with the police.

12. A suggestion was made by someone in my family that I should become a civil servant, and my uncle wrote to an old Oxford friend of his who held an important position in the Home Office for his advice.