

☐ 16. There were once three sons of a wealthy businessman. Whenever they met, the two eldest, who were twins, used to quarrel about which of them should be his father's heir. The youngest, who was not in the least ambitious, took no part in their arguments. As soon as they left home, the father arranged for an adequate income to be provided for each of them, but insisted that apart from this they should be financially self-supporting.

☐ 17. To have the kind of life that yields the most satisfaction, one must not live for oneself alone. Few things are more satisfying than work that makes a person an essential part of the family, community, or world, and in which one receives recognition for contributing toward the common good.